

SUSQUEHANNA TRAIL
WOODWORKERS GUILD

Est.
2004

FROM THE EDITOR'S DESK

Traditionally, woodworking is a craft that involves wood. Obviously. Well, as with many things, the correct answer is both yes and no. Sure, wood may be the main 'ingredient', but certainly not the only one. Metal may be used for hinges, straps, corners, or other small details that aren't really suited for wood. Inlay can almost anything. Metal, leather, bone, crystal, etc... The interior of boxes is traditionally felt or leather, but all sorts of materials are possible. The same is true of knobs and handles. That's what we're going to explore this month. We're taking a step away from traditional woodworking, exploring leatherwork, and its connection to wood. Since we've returned to the craft guild, it's a nice idea to occasionally see how other crafts and skills are related to what we do.

- Drew

Leather can be made from almost any mammal, reptile or water living creature.
A versatile, and durable material.

March Meeting

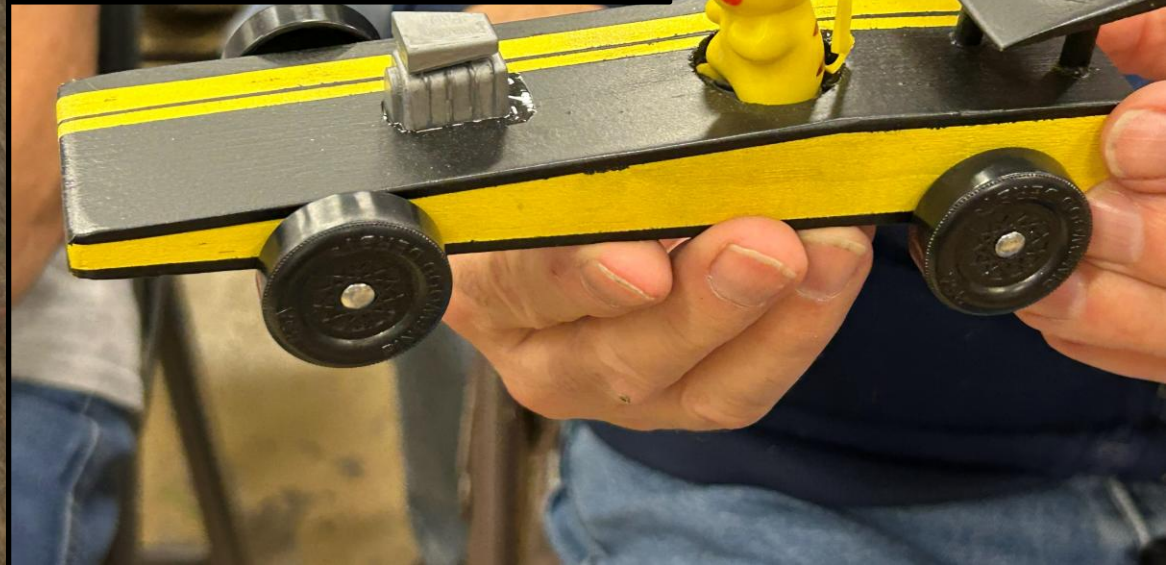

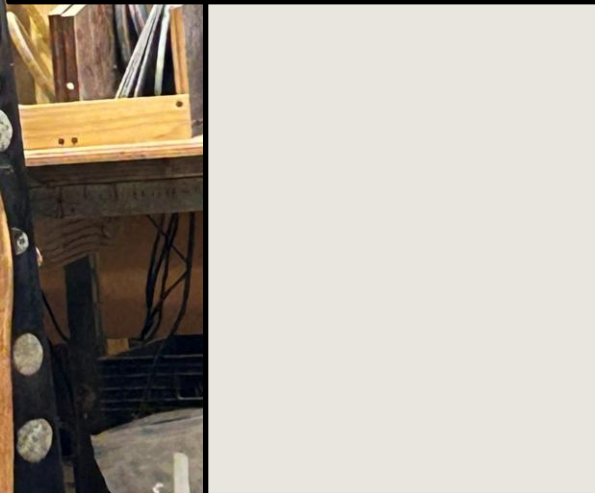

STWG1@OUTLOOK.COM

info@winterwindwoodworks.com

winterwindwoodworks.com

Winter Wind

Quality Charcuterie Boards & River Tables

